Voters Approve $125 million in School Construction Projects

TRENTON, September 27, 2006—Voters in nine of 17 school districts approved more than $125 million in school-construction spending on Tuesday, according to the New Jersey School Boards Association.

A total of 17 school construction proposals totaling $334.9 million were placed on the ballot on Tuesday, one of the five dates a year that a school board can propose a bond referendum. The previous bond elections this year were held in January, March and April, and the last remaining bond election date of the year will be Dec. 12.

So far in 2006, voters have approved 23 of 37 school-construction proposals that total a quarter billion dollars. The 62 percent success rate for school-construction proposals so far this year is slightly higher than the 58 percent approval rate of 2005—but still well behind the average 74-percent success rate of the previous five years, when voters could rely on upfront state grants to offset construction costs covered by local property taxes.

State School-Construction Aid

Under the Educational Facilities Construction and Financing Act of 2000, school districts have been receiving a minimum of 40 percent state-determined “eligible” construction costs. Before the state funding became available, 240 districts received no state funds for school construction and another 108 received less than 25 percent from the state—leaving property taxes to cover most or all of school construction costs.

State funding came through up-front grants until the grants were depleted last year. Currently, the state meets its 40-percent obligation by reimbursing school districts through annual installments of state debt service aid over the life of the district’s borrowing. For the 2006-2007 state budget, Gov. Corzine recommended sufficient funding to cover the authorized amounts of debt service aid.

A task force reviewing New Jersey’s school construction program recommended earlier this month that the state invest an additional $750 million in grants for non-Abbott districts, and $2.5 billion in new funding for Abbott districts, which do not need voter approval as 100% of school construction in those districts is covered by the state, and.

“The task force recommendations for additional state funds demonstrate that the need for new facilities has not diminished,” said Edwina M. Lee, NJSBA executive director. “School children throughout the state need adequate and safe school facilities.”

Results of the Sept. 26 ballot follow.
